

A table in the silent forest

It consists of only four parts, which are a tabletop, two legs, and a stretcher beam that serves to connect the legs.

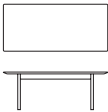

The tabletop is formed from 35-mm-thick solid boards of random widths put together. Selecting the materials and connecting them at random widths gives the tabletop a more natural look. To make the top appear as thin as possible, we cut the edges at curves to within 10-mm, then gave it slopes for a form that returns to 35-mm. Plus, the legs that support the tabletop have been given a delicate streamlined form, yet remain reliably strong.
