

Museum cabinet for small objects

Expanding upon the museum cabinet for private collection introduced in 2015, this new hinged-door series retains the same structure, adorned with a gentle outward curve and tama-buchi edge molding, and incorporates traditional Japanese joinery techniques to provide both strength and refined aesthetics. The doors are placed on either the back or sides, with both versions allowing the front to offer an unobstructed view of the items within. This new design features only glass panels and a slimmer wooden frame than before.
